Claire Chafee's award-winning commentary on the female condition is a must-read for all lovers of theater. The play follows the lives of four women, giving their experiences a snapshot quality through extensive monologue and intimate scene work. Mary, a twenty-something eccentric, holds up 7-11's for kicks. She eventually goes to live with her sister Lili, a lesbian and private investigator in her 30's. Lili is having a relationship with Renee, a paleontologist in her early 40's, who is separated from her husband. Both sisters long for the presence of their mother, Eleanor, an explorer who is circling the globe, refusing the force of her daughters that is trying to pull her back to them. This phenomenal play explores the independence and struggle of the female in today's society in a very real way, through an abstract presentation. If this play had one weakness, it would be the tendency for the play to distance us too much from these women through too-extensive self exploration. If we really listen to all the parallels in their language, however, this problem diminishes, and we as readers can see how deep Chafee's meaning really is. An excellent work from a very talented playwright.

My favorite play. It is so beautiful and witty. Great for monologues for women as well.
